

Recently, my husband and I have joined Indiana's list to not receive any calls from telemarketers, and it has worked out perfectly. We used to receive several calls a week, and now we do not receive any now. We have heard from our attorney general that the FCC is considering preempting state Telephone Privacy laws in favor of adopting a lower national standard. We do not want you to lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections because these laws have greatly improved our time at home. I believe home should be a place to relax, and when we receive several calls a week from annoying telemarketers that we will NEVER buy from, it makes our time at home extremely disrelaxing. Please DO NOT remove the state law that we benefit greatly from. Sincerely, Fred & Charlotte Walls
